Rodney digging around in a cardboard box.

Rodney: Did anyone see my day of service shirt? I'm helping out the food bank today. What's this? I've waited too long for my recognition. Now it's your turn to pay. If you want your precious shirt back, you'll find me and bring pizza?

Rodney crumples a piece of paper and throws it away. He places his hand on his chin in thought. Screen fades to white.

Black and white footage of an antique fan and typewriter on a desk. Words in white appear that read, "The Case of the Missing Shirt".

Rodney puts on a trench coat, hat and fake mustache.

Rodney: I started this case with a bad feeling. A bad feeling that my suspect was someone close to me. The note said, bring pizza. And who is the one pizza aficionado I know, but Houser. Steve Houser, a longtime corporate account manager, at Vizo Financial. Pennsylvania native, and New England Patriots fan. Ugh. Gross. Lover of pizza, sandwiches, Fluffernutters and appearing on episodes of ATC.

Rodney: I figured I'd follow him to this weekend bowling league to see what he's up to. Is anything suspicious going on? Not unless you count this questionable chicken on my sandwich. I knew I should have had Carrabbas.

Screen fades to black. Snoring sounds.

Houser: Rodney, what are you doing? Are you following me?

Rodney: No. Why would you say that?

Houser: You have a file in the front seat of your car with my name on it. You live, like, 30 miles from here. By the way, don't you think the sign on the side of the car kind of gives you away?

Rodney: Yeah, right. Well...did you take my day of service shirt?

Houser: No, I didn't take your shirt. Why would I take your shirt?

Rodney: It's not about the shirt. It's about the recognition. You're jealous. It says it right here in your note!

Houser: What note? I didn't write this note. I don't care that much about pizza. You know I'm more of a burger aficionado anyway. But I'll tell you one thing. This morning, I was in service hour and Judy from marketing had mentioned that her favorite food was pizza.

Rodney: Judy, huh?

[jazz music playing]

Rodney: Judy Price, communication assistant at Vizo Financial. Likes to travel, has two dogs and recently received certification in podcasting from Berkeley School of Journalism, Advanced Media Institute. Likes to eat pizza.

Rodney: I had no idea Judy could be so vicious taking my shirt. It's unbelievable. What did I ever do to her? So, I decided to use my super sleuth skills in a way many don't and get right to the bottom of this.

Judy: Hi, Rodney. How are you?

Rodney: I'm not here for pleasantries, Judy. I know what you did.

Judy: What did I do?

Rodney: You took my day of service shirt! A you sent me this note right here.

Judy: Rodney, I didn't send you that note, and I definitely didn't steal your shirt.

Rodney: Well, I have a good authority that you said during the service hour yesterday that your favorite food was pizza. I have witnesses, so I don't want to hear your excuses. Go, go gadget mute!

Judy: Rodney. That doesn't work. You're not Inspector Gadget. And did you ever think I couldn't steal your shirt? I'm all the way down in South Carolina.

Rodney: I didn't. I didn't think of that.

Judy: See, I'm not your thief. And by the way, the only reason that came up was because Matt mentioned that we should have virtual pizza parties each month for team building.

Rodney: Kiskis...

Judy: Yeah. He's the biggest pizza fan I know.

Rodney: Well, thanks, Judy. And I'm sorry for accusing you. I got to write that down.

Judy: That Matt's the biggest pizza fan I know?

Rodney: Now, just all this talk about pizza is making me hungry, and I want to order some for dinner tonight.

Judy: Oh, ok.

[jazz music playing]

Rodney: Matt Kiskis. My ATC cameraman, editor and producer. World traveler, chicken and duck enthusiast, biggest pizza fan Judy knows and shirt thief. Why am I writing this down? It was you all along!

Matt [dressed in a chicken mask]: Whoa, whoa! No Matthew here. Nothing but us chickens here.

Rodney: Yeah, you're right. Wait a second! We don't have any chickens working here!

Rodney pulls off chicken mask to reveal it's Matt.

Matt: OK. Yes, I did. I did it. I'm glad, you hear me? Glad! I am so sick and tired of you getting all the glory for ATC when I get none of the credit. Everyone says, Rodney, what a great ATC. Rodney, you're so funny in ATC. I'm so sick of it. And you know what? I would have gotten away with it too if it wasn't for you pesky Rams fan.

Rodney: Hey, well, we won the super bowl. And anyway, I always get the last line.

Matt: You mean the last laugh, right?

Rodney: No, I mean the last line. Here's what's happening, ATC.

A light blue screen appears with white lettering that reads, 'What's Happening ATC?' Letters appear upside down then flip to right side up. A small version of Rodney wearing a blue collared shirt and brown dress pants and dress shoes drops down from the top of the screen onto the question mark.

Rodney is sitting in front of a pale blue screen with white lettering that reads, 'Around the Corporate'. A wooden column is in the background to the left.
